Situation:

Willich, a growing town of around 52,000, between Düsseldorf and the Dutch border, is made up from four towns, administratively joined together in 1970. Since the 1980's, an industrial park has been growing which today provides more than 7000 jobs. The city prides itself on being family friendly and has encouraged families to move into the area.

Westdeutscher Gemeinschaftsverband e.V., belonging to the BeG, has planted a number of churches in this region of Germany and sees Willich, with the influx of young families into new housing estates, as key to growth. Traditional churches exist in each of the four city districts. Contacts and networks still exist from an awakening in the 1970's.

A motivated "start" team of 6 with diverse contacts to churches and the community is already on the go, meeting together with others regularly in a supportive house group.
